We have only space to give a short synopsis of his remarks. He commenced by showing that the Catholic Church is purely Democratica not politically speaking, but from the fact that its prelates and dignitaries are dethe people. Royal families in Europe sit side by side with the prelates of the Roman Catholic Church whose origin is wrapt in obscurity, and whose origin is wrapt in obscurity, and whose only rank is their superior piety. He also stated that most great men of the post are almost forgotten, while the great men of the church are never forgotten. There is the property heralded by the press. In the matter of vegetables our poor people have not only very little variety, but they hardly make any effort to procure more. Yet most of our rural laborers have gardens for which they can easily obtain manure; but with cabbages, onions and potatoes they are content. Jerusalem artichokes are cultivated without trouble; leeks; but we hardly ever see them in a cottage garden. As for other things which play such an important part in Franch cottage cookery, pumpkins, white beaus, lentils, eatherity, and the various kinds of peasanthe and respectives or these pane; where do we see them grown or used Freu at rich men's teasts the clean-eating. from at rich men's least the clean-eating, in the chopped leaf tarragon plant, which a salad requires to be perfect, are mostly convictionous by their absence.
